THE CHALLENGE

Retailers spend billions on onboarding

The retail industry hires 10 million workers each year, and they're hiring even more during the pandemic. It's not uncommon for it to take up to six weeks to train workers to reach productivity, costing retailers billions.

What's getting in the way of effective on-the-job training?

Ineffective learning delivery

An outdated classroom-style learning model means modern workers don't get the personalized training they need to learn effectively or retain information.

Inconsistent job shadowing

With no microlearning offered in the flow of work, employees must job shadow, an expensive and difficult -to-scale solution that produces inconsistent and often low quality results because managers can't control content.

Deployment delays

It takes weeks, even months, to evolve training materials and get them to the frontline, so workers use outdated manuals and guidance.

Smart Access

Embed training on the floor
Workers get fast access to personalized training and guidance with technology that's location aware.

Deliver microlearning in the flow of work
Your workers consume on-the-job training and guidance that's specific to their role, skill level and search history — in just seconds.

Access real-time analytics
View analytics according to content asset, individual worker, and location, so you know how effective your training is and where you may need to adjust your efforts.

Rapidly create & deploy content
Retail leaders can quickly and easily create and distribute bite-size training, like quick how-to videos, checklists and guides.
